Meeting room issues have a major impact on your time and your business

Roll over circles for more info

So, how can you deliver the video conferencing support and technology ROI your organization demands while finding time to focus on adding even greater business value?

The answer is in a proactive service solution. Because just like you wouldn't drive a car without insurance, no business should make a strategic investment in room systems and solutions without a warranty or service agreement to back it up.<sup>1</sup>

The case for services

We understand that getting buy-in from your business can be challenging, especially when it comes to investing in new technology and services. That's why we want to help you build a strong business case.

See how service assistance can benefit your business and enhance your video-conferencing experience:

Cost-effectiveness

By purchasing a service plan that already includes things like technical assistance, advanced software, warranty coverage and more, you get to enjoy a simpler and more economical solution.

Predictable expenses

Service plans offer organizations a predictable expense structure, enabling them to budget more effectively and mitigate unexpected costs stemming from device malfunctions or support needs.

Enhanced user experience

At the heart of support solutions lies a commitment to delivering exceptional customer service through personalized assistance channels and swift issue resolution.

The true cost of meeting downtime

With $37 billion per year estimated to be spent on unproductive meetings<sup>2</sup>, ensuring reliability is a key step in increasing and maintaining meeting productivity while ensuring an optimal employee experience.

As we consider the ongoing costs of maintenance, support, and potential downtime, the business case gets stronger.

The price tag for a 30-minute meeting with three employees ranges from $700-$1,600, going up to $2,000 if a C-suite executive is involved<sup>3</sup>.

This means that, without features like modern device management or real-time alerts to help prevent downtime, a meeting that starts 15 minutes late will cost your business anywhere from $350 to $1,000.

If just five 60-minute meetings a year were lost due to video-conferencing tech woes, it could cost as much as $10,000.
